

I would like to impart to you how much I have come to appreciate the Indiana Telephone Privacy Law. It's bad enough that the local paper can litter my yard with their weekly advertising in spite of my not receiving the paper at my home, and my mailbox is filled with trash I have no time for day after day. I love not being called by telemarketers. I know when my phone rings that it's someone I either want or need to talk to. Please either adopt a stricter policy similar to Indiana's, allow the state law to override the federal regulation, once in place, or just leave this matter up to the states. I want my phone traffic to stay the way it is.
